Evansville physicians elected to ISMA leadership roles

INDIANAPOLIS – Proceedings of the 168th annual convention of the Indiana State Medical Association (ISMA), held Sept. 16-17 in Indianapolis, included a swearing in ceremony for Evansville physicians elected to leadership roles.

- Stacie Wenk, DO, RPh, of Evansville, was chosen as president-elect. Dr. Wenk, chief clinical integration officer for the St. Vincent Indiana Southwest Region, is board certified in internal medicine and geriatrics. Her previous ISMA leadership roles include terms as speaker of the ISMA House of Delegates, treasurer, alternate trustee and a member of several ISMA commissions and committees.
- Mike Hoover, MD, of Evansville, has been re-elected an ISMA delegate to the American Medical Association (AMA). A general surgeon, Dr. Hoover practices at the Veterans Administration Outpatient Center in Evansville. He is a past president of both ISMA and the Vanderburgh County Medical Society.
- Heidi M. Dunniway, MD, an Evansville otolaryngologist, has been re-elected an alternate ISMA delegate to the AMA. Dr. Dunniway is chief medical officer for the St. Vincent Indiana Southwest Region. An ISMA past president, she is a co-founder of ISMA's Women in Medicine Committee as well as a former ISMA speaker and vice speaker.

The Indiana State Medical Association is the largest physician organization in Indiana and is dedicated to promoting the well-being of doctors and their patients.
