Jeanne Darroca inaugurated as the Indiana State Medical Association Alliance president

INDIANAPOLIS (Oct. 2, 2007) Jeanne Darroca of Muncie, was installed as the new Indiana State Medical Association Alliance (ISMA-A) president on Saturday, Sept. 29, at the Westin Hotel, downtown Indianapolis.

During her term, Darroca plans to increase membership by strengthening the Alliance’s relationship with spouses of medical students and residents, and continue scholarship projects.

“I think one of the most important projects the Alliance supports is the AMA Foundation, which contributes to the Medical Scholars Fund,” explained Darroca. “The scholarships and grants provided can help ease the financial burden for young, talented medical school students.”

She also wants to provide meaningful programs and resources to county medical society alliances.

A medical technologist, Darroca has been an ISMA-A member since 1985. She has served as past president of the Delaware-Blackford County Medical Society Alliance. She also has served on the Annual Children’s Health Fair Committee in Muncie.

Darroca’s husband, Bob Darroca, M.D., is an ob/gyn in Muncie. The couple has two grown children.

The ISMA-A is primarily composed of physicians’ spouses dedicated to the health of Indiana residents. The organization targets its efforts toward providing statewide initiatives ensuring all individuals have an opportunity for healthier living through community and school health education, sound health legislation, immunization programs, dissemination of health information and support for health- related charitable endeavors.
